

Announcing Sage Summit 2011: A whole new conference experience.

The purpose of Sage Summit, our popular customer conference, is to provide you with educational and networking opportunities that you simply can't find elsewhere. I'm pleased to report that planning for the next Summit is already well underway. We're making changes to add even more value, shifting the event to July, which many of you tell us works better for your business cycles. For the first time, we're also linking Insights, our business partner conference, to Summit so we can create even more opportunity for our entire business community to work together.

To support those changes, our next Sage Summit will be held July 10-15, 2011, at the Gaylord National in Washington, D.C., with partner-focused tracks from the 10th to the 13th, and customer tracks from the 13th to the 15th.

Between now and the first combined Summit, Sage will continue to help you learn and network through our support of customer communities, our participation in local customer events, and our emphasis on learning through Sage University. Summit, and all of these other opportunities we're building to support you, continues our commitment to delivering a great customer experience.

Look for future information about Summit at www.sagesummit.com, and if you're using Twitter, consider following us @sagenamerica.

Thank you for continuing to partner with Sage for your business management needs. I look forward to seeing you in Washington, D.C., in July 2011.
